

Academic Blogging in the 21st Century Knowledge Economy

University of Southern Queensland

The University of Southern Queensland has generously funded a 2023 UniSQ Research Capacity Building Grant to be completed in conjunction with VIDA: Blog of the Australian Women's History Network.

The Opportunity

We are seeking academics who are readers, authors, and editors of academic blogs to participate in an interview about their experience with and perceptions of academic blogging.

The Team

The team brings together historians and social scientists with academic blogging experience.

Principal Investigator: Dr Ana Stevenson (University of Southern Queensland)

Co-Investigator: Dr Kieran Balloo (University of Southern Queensland)

Project Officer: Danaé Carlile (University of Southern Queensland)

The Project

Title: Academic Blogging and the Public Humanities in the Twenty-First-Century Knowledge Economy

Abstract: This project aims to investigate the influence of academic blogging on the twenty-first-century knowledge economy. Building on a developing literature about the position of academic blogging in the scholarly publishing landscape, this project is significant as the first mixed-methods study of its kind. Expected outcomes include greater understanding of the use and impact of academic blogs across the three core domains of a university's mission: teaching, research, and public engagement. Benefits include insight into the function of academic blogging at a juncture when the importance of public-facing research outputs is increasingly recognised.

Ethics: This project has gained ethics approval from the University of Southern Queensland {ETH2023-0103}.

Website: www.auswhn.org.au/blog/academic-blogging-public-humanities/

Get in Touch

To express interest in participating in the interview, please fill out this Microsoft Form: <https://shorturl.at/oqvM6>.

For any further questions, please reach out to Ana Stevenson: ana.stevenson@usq.edu.au

unisq.edu.au